Conference Evaluation

Please take a few minutes to complete our evaluation form

Please tick which of our draft recommendations you support

Drug and Alcohol Education		Parenting and Prevention		Safety, Availability and Policing
Drug/PSHE Education should be a standard part of teacher training		Parents must play a part in educating their children about drugs and alcohol		Police and trading standards should liaise more closely to enforce ID policies around alcohol sales
Schools should be required to spend a certain amount of time on drug education and to cover specific topics		Parents should have opportunities to improve their knowledge about drugs and alcohol		There should be a more visible police presence in areas and at times where there is a high number of drinkers, drug takers and drug dealers
Schools should engage young people by using interactive teaching techniques		Parents should aim for conversations about drugs to be recurrent, relaxed and open		Ways to increase and improve communication between young people and the police should be identified and put into practice
Drug education lessons should feel like an ongoing learning process not one off information sessions		Conversations about drugs and alcohol should begin before children become teenagers
If people are discussing their own experiences this must be appropriate to the audience of young people		Parents should be authoritative but not authoritarian.
Confidential student evaluations of lessons would help improve drug education
